

Narrative Workshop III
Tuesday, March 19th, 10:00 – 5:00
King's College, Cambridge

The Centre for Narrative Research is organizing its third one-day workshop, this time focussing on the relationship between narrative and education. The workshop is primarily geared to post-graduate students working in narrative research, but is also open to interested others at any stage in their career.

The day-long event will focus on presentations from four researchers working with narrative and education: The researchers will 'walk through' one piece of data, explaining discuss how their data was gathered and their perceptions of the relationship between narrative and discourse analysis as it applies to their work: Michael Bamberg (Clark University) will use video-taped group discussions to examine the identity claims made by adolescent boys; Phil Cohen (University of East London) will discuss a research project which he conducted on cultures of racism in primary schools; Maria Tamboukou (University of East London) will use a Foucauldian framework to discuss her work on women's educational narratives; and Elaine Unterhalter (Institute of Education) will discuss her work on South African autobiographical writings and the framing of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in relation to educational institutions and transformative politics. In addition to the four presentations, there will be considerable time allowed for the questions and comments of workshop participants. A portion of the afternoon session will be conducted in small groups.

Those needing to stay overnight in Cambridge should visit Tourist Information's website, which has a comprehensive listing of available accommodation:

The workshop is limited to fifty participants. The deadline for applications is March 1st. If there are remaining places after this date, applications may still be considered. The cost for the workshop is £50, and includes registration, morning coffee, light buffet lunch, and reception. There are also a small number of hardship funds available. Applications must be accompanied by a cheque or money order, made payable to the University of East London.

If you would like more information on the workshop, please contact any of the co-directors of the centre: Molly Andrews (M.Andrews@uel.ac.uk), Corinne Squire (C.Squire@uel.ac.uk) or Maria Tamboukou (Tamboukou@uel.ac.uk).
